

*The Death of Major Genl. James B. McPherson.
July 22nd 1864.*

Two army commanders only were killed in battle during the late war. General Albert Sidney Johnston at Shiloh April 6th 1862 and General James B. McPherson before Atlanta, July 22nd 1864.

The particulars of General Johnston's death are well known. He fell at the head of the Confederate Army early in the engagement, and died surrounded by his personal staff and friends.

General McPherson fell untended by any officer of his staff, and breathed his life away with no one near him but a private soldier.

The circumstances are not generally known. The opinion prevails that he threw away his life: that he was far in advance of his own troops and exposed himself
